Real News, Real Talk
Collaborating on a Workshop for Middle Schoolers
Real NEWS, Real TALK for Your Middle Schooler

Join us for a free workshop that immerses rising 6th, 7th and 8th grade students in an environment that encourages critical thinking, civil discourse, information literacy and a lifelong love of learning. Your middle schooler will learn how to find quality information, evaluate sources, communicate ideas effectively and develop informed opinions. Registration is required and the deadline to reserve your space is July 28. Snacks will be provided.

August 3, 2017
1 - 5 p.m. at Jackson Library
The University of North Carolina at Greensboro
1400 Spring Garden Street, Greensboro, NC 27412

For more information and to register, visit https://tinyurl.com/realtalkuncg

The event is cosponsored by Onward! and the UNCG Department of Communication Studies. For disability accommodations, email libevent@uncg.edu.

“After the Real News, Real Talk Workshop, I am more confident about...”
I really enjoyed getting to know new people that live in Greensboro that I wouldn't already know if I didn't come to this workshop. I liked getting to know new people.

The most important thing I learned today was how to choose reliable and accurate information resources.

I learned about how to find good evidence.

How to form a credible claim.

How to decide if something is reliable or not.

We may be middle schoolers but we can change the community and Greensboro for the better because of our great imaginations.

How you can respond respectfully to other people's ideas and thoughts.

I think it was very important to learn how to find a credible source using the ABC method.

I enjoyed this experience. I learned a lot about the ABC mnemonic, credibility, and making a claim or assertion. This will definitely help me out in the future!

I learned about communication.

SNACKS!!!!!!!

Scenario

You go to the doctor and they tell you that you are pre-diabetic. You go home and Google this diagnosis. Let’s go over some websites and see which ones might help you learn more about pre-diabetes.
Blogs: Sweet Success, My life with Type 2 Diabetes

Sweet Success: My life with Type 2 Diabetes

I've been quite unwell lately. I'm sorry. Diabetes hasn't been playing nicely for a while now and I just can't seem to get my HbA1c to pay attention to my concerns. Because my "A1c is so good". I saw him again and my A1c actually went back down a bit. WTF? Makes zero sense to me, but whatever. He said "medication changes, see you in 3 months". No comment about a 190 fasting or 171 before dinner. I guess I'm just supposed to shut up, not worry and trust my doctor. Bullshit.

I posted my concerns/questions on Facebook about something the doctor said: "A1c is a better predictor of future complications than individual high numbers." It made me think that maybe I'm just worrying too much, but some of the answers I received made me feel a lot better about my concerns. High individual numbers should be a concern and someone ought to be helping me figure out how to "fix" this. This gave me the desire to stop feeling sorry for myself and DO SOMETHING! (The old lists may be back.)

About the only thing the doctor suggested to me was that I see a dietician. Hmph. Although I've never met one, I have spent the last 10+ years figuring out what I can and can't eat. I have been in group meetings with diabetics and the things they suggest are as far from anything I can do (whole grains, cereals with more fiber, sweet potatoes instead of white, brown rice instead of white...) that I was never impressed. I am NOT closing diabetics, I think they are a valuable resource, I'm just convinced one could help me, the about to find out.

A very nice woman called me to discuss my referral to see her. We talked for a bit (I
