This study is a comparative analysis of the vocabularies of Horn and Peterson's The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters¹ and the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary.² Both books purport to present a list of words most frequently encountered by stenographers and students of shorthand.

The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters, published "in answer to repeated requests for data on the words appearing most frequently in business letters,"³ is a frequency list specific to business writing. Although the book carries the copyright date of 1943, the vocabulary was compiled much earlier. The listings constitute a part of the data used in the preparation of the 10,000 words making up the ranked frequency list compiled by Ernest Horn and staff and published in 1926 under the title of A Basic Writing Vocabulary: 10,000 Words Most Commonly Used in Writing. The introduction to that publication gives credit to Miss Cora Crowder for the contribution of her Master's study at the University of Minnesota concerning words found in business writing. With additional data from supplementary sources, the complete listing represents twenty-six classes of business, as follows:

1. Miscellaneous
2. Florists
3. Automobile manufacturers and sales companies

²John Robert Gregg, Gregg Shorthand Dictionary (New York: Gregg Publishing Company), 1930.

³Horn and Peterson, op. cit., p. 1.

4. Wholesale and retail druggists
5. Manufacturers of clothing and textiles
6. Dealers in lumber and furniture
7. Manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of foodstuffs
8. Law firms
9. Insurance companies
10. Dealers in crockery and china
11. Building and construction companies
12. Community organizations
13. Coal and oil companies
14. Electrical supply companies
15. Medical supply companies
16. School supply companies
17. Banks; loan and investment companies
18. Public utilities
19. Dealers in hardware and machinery
20. Car and truck companies
21. Railroad and express companies
22. Steel and iron manufacturers
23. Schools, churches, and libraries
24. Department stores
25. Publishers
26. Farmers⁴

The main part of the book consists of more than 14,000 words listed alphabetically with their assigned frequency ranks and the number of times each word was found in the total of 1,436,223 running words. Three appendices are provided, listing (A) the 5,226 most-used words arranged in the order of their frequency, (B) omitted abbreviations, and (C) omitted fractions and numbers.

The reliability of the assigned ranks beyond the rank of 5,225 is open to question. Humphrey has tabulated an analysis showing that the first 5,000 words represent 1,133,064 of the total 1,436,223 running words examined. He shows that "approximately 40% of all the different words written occurred only once or twice": 4,217 occurred only once; 1,772 occurred only twice.⁵

⁵Clyde W. Humphrey, "Is Word Frequency Misused?" The Business Education World, XXV, No. 9 (May, 1945), p. 468.

The Gregg Shorthand Dictionary was revised in 1930 to conform to changes in shorthand outlines incorporated in the Anniversary Edition of the Gregg Shorthand Manual and supplementary materials. The revision took account of high-frequency words and eliminated many of the infrequent terms that appeared in the older editions. The dictionary purported to contain "nearly 19,000 most frequently used words"⁶ but, because of duplicate listings, actually contains considerably fewer different words. In general, the words are arranged in alphabetical order, but derivatives and like outlines are placed under key words to facilitate the learning of shorthand outlines. Some words have also a third or fourth listing in juxtaposition to certain basic outlines, irrespective of their alphabetical sequence. For example, "apartment," "compartment," and "department," besides appearing in alphabetical order, recur under each of the other words in this group and as derivatives of "part"; thus each appears four times in the body of the book. The following comment in the Introduction gives special mention of the treatment of such items:

"Derivatives in every case are grouped under the root word in accessible form. Since the root words in type project slightly beyond the margin of the type column, the finding of any word is greatly facilitated--it is necessary only to look down the comparatively small list of root words that stand out at the left of each column.

"Direct derivatives, and in some cases closely allied words, are listed under their root words. This has been done in order to emphasize the value of the analogical building of outlines, and also in the belief that the practice of a group of related outlines is more valuable than the practice of the isolated outlines."⁷

Other groupings, primarily to aid the learner in mastery of principles for analogous words, are provided in the Introduction of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary. Most of the words thus listed are also presented in the body of the book. The following tabulation shows the total number of words listed, the number of duplicates, and the total number of different words in the entire dictionary.

In Body of Dictionary:

Number of duplicates	905
Number of different words	17,766

In Introduction of Dictionary:

Number of words repeated in body. .	496
Number of different words listed
only in Introduction	52
Total number of different words in

The source from which the words were selected for inclusion in the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary, according to Louis A. Leslie, who compiled the present edition, was "Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, Third Edition⁸ of the Merriam Series, printed in 1929, Copyright date, 1925." In a letter dated February 13, 1945, Mr. Leslie made the following comment:

"Out of the 100,000 words given in Webster's Collegiate Dictionary I included every word except those for which the outline is so easy that no one would be inclined to look in the dictionary and those that occur so very in-⁸Deviations from Webster's authorized forms in the use of the hyphen may be noted in the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary presentation of words beginning with the prefix "non." No printing of the Third Edition of Webster's Collegiate Dictionary shows a hyphen in such words as "noncommissioned," "nonappearance," "noncombatant," "nonparticipating," "nonsubscriber," etc. A hyphen is used in the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary forms.

frequently that there would be little or no demand for them.⁹

His stated criteria for selecting the words were:

- "1. The shorthand outline for the word must not be one so simple that the shorthand writer would have no cause to look it up. Therefore, such words as cat and rat are omitted, regardless of frequency.
- "2. The word must be one for which the shorthand writer might sometime have occasion to want an outline. . . ."⁹

Because the selection was admittedly subjective, he preferred "to include some words unnecessarily rather than to exclude any word that a writer might have occasion to look for."⁹

Omissions of some high-frequency words are accounted for in the statement in the Introduction that "The words for which the shorthand forms are immediately obvious have been omitted" and the following classifications of words that "have been eliminated as being unnecessary":

- "1. Short, simple words that any student who is still working on the early part of the Manual can easily write such words as cat, dog, etc.
- "2. Purely 'dictionary words.' Every word in the list of nearly 19,000 is a word in good usage. . . .
- "3. Certain derivatives that are formed in accordance with the rules given in the textbook, such as the numerous derivatives of the suffix ulate, and some others. In order to save space and make room for more root words, a complete table of these suffix derivatives is given in this Introduction. In case there should be doubt as to the correct writing of one of the derivatives, reference to this table will make the matter clear."¹⁰

⁹Letter, dated February 13, 1945.

¹⁰John Robert Gregg, Gregg Shorthand Dictionary (New York: Gregg Publishing Company, 1930), p. v.

Since the Gregg list involves sound-symbols as well as word-forms, whereas the Horn-Peterson list is concerned only with the written word-forms, deviations logically evolve in certain entries. Possessives, singular or plural, having the same sound as a form already recorded are omitted in the Gregg list. They are necessarily included in the Horn-Peterson list of various word-forms.

The simplicity of modifying a basic shorthand outline by the addition of a dot to represent "ing" and a simple s-stroke for "ings" justifies the omission of these derivative forms in the Gregg list, but they may not be omitted in a ranked frequency list.

The incidence of possessives and forms ending in "ing" or "ings" can be measured in the present study, and consideration is given to these differences in the reported findings.

Certain negligible differences are discoverable also in the occurrence of two entries in the Gregg list for two separate sounds of a single word-form, requiring only one entry in the Horn-Peterson list, as in the case of "live" (verb) and "live" (adjective). Variations in spelling of such words as "reenforce," "reinforce," though rare, should be considered in a total count of alphabetized items. Variations in the use of the hyphen, however, do not disturb the structure of comparison and thus do not limit the comparability.

With the exception of the items just mentioned, the two books offer comparable materials as vocabularies purporting to present the words most likely to be encountered in the shorthand-reporting of business writing.

Utilization of Vocabulary Lists in Shorthand Instruction

Vocabulary lists and word-frequency ranks have been used extensively in the construction of instructional materials in stenography and typewriting and in testing and measuring of abilities in these fields. Brief mention is made here of some textbooks and research studies specific to Gregg shorthand which have given consideration to word-frequency content.

In the preparation of the Anniversary Edition of Gregg Shorthand (1929), one of the first steps was "an exhaustive analysis of the words contained in the Horn and the Harvard studies of the comparative frequency of words."¹²

Gregg Speed Studies, Anniversary Edition, a companion to Gregg Shorthand Manual, includes the 5,000 most frequently occurring words.

A compilation of high-frequency words, together with their shorthand forms, was published in 1931 under the title of 5,000 Most-Used Shorthand Forms. The booklet is organized to present the words in sequences corresponding to the arrangement of the shorthand principles in the Gregg Shorthand Manual.

Direct-Method Materials for Gregg Shorthand, by Ann Brewington and Helen I. Scutter, is "restricted to the 10,000 most common words, exclusive of proper names, with at least 75 per cent of the words selected from the first 5,000 of the most common words in early units." . . . "The vocabulary is selected from Horn's Basic

Writing Vocabulary and Thorndike's Teacher's Word Book.¹³

The vocabulary of Direct Practice Units for Beginning Gregg Shorthand, by Odell, Rowe, and Stuart "is limited at first to the commonest 500 words from Horn's Basic Writing Vocabulary or a comparable word list (Thorndike, Ayres, and Dewey)."¹⁴

The materials of the Correlated Dictation and Transcription, by Forkner, Osborne, and O'Brien, represent "a controlled vocabulary of 3,000 most-used words from Horn's Basic Writing Vocabulary plus names of all cities in the United States with a population of 100,000 or more, the names of the forty-eight states, and common proper names--only these and all these are used."¹⁵

Shorthand Skills Based on High-Frequency Words and Phrases, by Ernestine Donaldson, utilizes Horn's Basic Writing Vocabulary.¹⁶

Gregg Shorthand, Direct-Approach Method, by William R. Odell and Esta Ross Stuart, limits the initial learning of shorthand to a basic vocabulary of 550 high-frequency words which encompass practically all the shorthand principles.¹⁷

Lessenberry, in 1928, analyzed Horn's Basic Writing Vocabulary in terms of the principles of shorthand presented in the older edition of the Gregg Shorthand Manual, to determine the importance of prefixes and suffixes.¹⁸ James Crawford, in a Master's research study in 1940, extended the analysis of prefixes and suffixes occurring in the 10,000 commonest words and determined their weighted credit value.¹⁹

Claude Harper used the Horn list in an analysis and comparison of the vocabularies of Functional Method Dictation by Louis A. Leslie and Speed Drills in Gregg Shorthand by Louis A. Leslie and Charles E. Zoubek.²⁰

The vocabulary content of various dictation books and instructional materials for advanced shorthand courses usually give some consideration to word-frequencies through sectioning certain portions according to the frequency ranks involved or by specifying, in the preface or teacher's manual or publisher's announcements, the extent of vocabulary control in the entire book.

CHAPTER II

Procedures

The preliminary data from the two lists were prepared by two persons, one going through both books simultaneously and calling out and classifying each word to the other person who typed the word in one of three columns to list (1) words found in both the Gregg list and the Horn-Peterson list, (2) words found in the Horn-Peterson list but not found in the Gregg list, (3) words found in the Gregg list but not found in the Horn-Peterson list. When words in the Gregg list appeared out of alphabetical order, they were marked with an asterisk so that they could be isolated later and examined for duplicates.

After the preliminary data from the two books were completed, the words were checked by the investigator and two assistants. These assistants were college seniors and majors in business education. One assistant held the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary, the other assistant held The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters. The investigator, who held the typed list of data, called out each word and designated the column in the data in which the word appeared. Upon the calling and spelling of each word, the assistants reported whether the entry was correct. By this method, all of the words in the tabulated lists were verified.

The words on the typed pages of the recorded data were then counted, and a notation was made of the number of words in each column. These figures were totaled on the adding machine. As a double check, the words on each page of the Gregg list were counted mentally and totalled on the adding machine. The figures were found to agree with the totals obtained for the corresponding columns of the recorded data. The same procedure was followed for the Horn-Peterson list, and the totals were found to agree.

After the double check was made, the words marked with an asterisk (words not in alphabetic sequence) were typed in alphabetical order and reclassified as to whether or not they were "repeats"; i.e., words that were found appearing twice or more. (See Appendix D.) The "repeats" were then excluded from the Gregg list in order to ascertain the total number of different words. In the process of checking and verification, difficulties were encountered in locating in the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary words that did not appear in alphabetical order. For example, "monoxide" has only one listing-- appearing under "oxygen"; "anarchy," has only one listing under "monarchy." Such items were compiled in a separate reference list (Appendix E).

The last step in determining the number of different words in the Gregg list was the treatment of the words appearing in the Introduction of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary. These words were classified according to whether they also appeared in the body of the dictionary. An examination of the words that were not included suggested the possibility that they might be of insufficient frequency to have a place in the body of the dictionary. Accordingly, The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters and A Basic Writing Vocabulary: 10,000 Words Most Commonly Used in Writing were used to determine whether the frequency ranks might account for the omission of the words in the body of the Gregg list.

The final alphabetized lists were examined for the relative proportions of words representing each letter of the alphabet, and frequency distributions were made for each vocabulary on the basis of the initial letter to give a preliminary indication of consistency of samplings.

As was mentioned on page 7, the two lists are not similar in the inclusion of possessives and the suffixes "ing" and "ings." All words involving these forms were therefore isolated from both lists for comparison to determine to what extent these factors would account for the differences in the findings. Deviations in the use of the hyphen do not affect the count. When such derivatives occurred, they were noted in the typed data by writing the word without the hyphen and putting in parentheses the same word with a hyphen.

CHAPTER III

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Gregg Shorthand Dictionary, announced as containing "the 19,000 most frequently used words,"²¹ actually presents 17,766 different words in the body of the book and 52 additional words in the Introduction, for which shorthand outlines may be found. A total of 18,671 items are listed in the body of the dictionary; of these, 905 are words that recur in nonalphabetic sequence, usually grouped under the stem words.

The Horn-Peterson Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters, announced as listing 14,834 words was found, by count, to contain 14,721 words.

The two books were found to be similar in frequency distribution of words by initial letter. Table I gives the total number of words in the two books and their alphabetic distribution.

Three major lists of words were evolved from analysis of the two books. Appendix A gives the words that appear in both vocabularies, Appendix B gives the words included in the Horn-Peterson list but not found in the Gregg list, and Appendix C gives the words included in the Gregg list but not found in the Horn-Peterson list. This listing excludes all duplicates found in the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary.

The duplicated words recorded in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary are given in Appendix D, with a notation of the number of times each word appeared.

*Excluding duplicates.

There were 1,074 words out of alphabetical order in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary. Out of the total 1,074 words, 905 were found to be duplicates. The remaining 169 words that were not repeated are marked by an asterisk in Appendix C and are also shown in Appendix E. Table II shows the distribution of words that appeared out of alphabetical order in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary.

In addition to the words in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary the Introduction of the book presents 548 words; of these, 496 were found to appear in the body of the dictionary. These words are given in Appendix F. The frequency ranks of the remaining 52 words of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary were examined in The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters and A Basic Writing Vocabulary: 10,000 Words Most Commonly Used in Writing. It was found that 21 of the 52 words were derivatives involving merely the addition of "s" or "ed" to the form of listed words. There were 28 words that were not given a frequency rank in either book. Only 12 were given a frequency rank in the Horn list of 10,000 and 23 words were reported in the Horn-Petersen list. The analysis of the content of the Introduction to the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary was made for the purpose of ascertaining an accurate count of the different words contained in the Gregg list. The findings reported in the following discussion pertain only to the vocabulary presented in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary.

Of the 17,766 different words in the body of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary and the 14,721 words in the Horn-Petersen Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters, 6,368 appear in both lists. These words represent 35.8% of the different words found in the Gregg list and 43.2% of the total words in the Horn-Peterson list.

Reference was made earlier to the fact that omission of many "ing" words in the Gregg list is to be expected because the termination is expressed in shorthand by merely a dot after the outline. The relatively few instances in the Gregg list of words ending in "ing" or "ings" were found to be entities rather than derivatives. (Examples: awning, bookkeeping, cunning, furnishings). Possessive forms are likewise omitted in the Gregg list since the shorthand outline is determined by sound and is unaffected by apostrophes. Table III gives the comparative data on these items, which should be considered in estimating the extent of agreement in the two vocabularies.

When allowance is made for these classes of words, necessary in a frequency list of word-forms but of little value in a shorthand reference list, the proportion of agreement represents 54% coverage, actual or implied.

A portion of the remaining 46% of The Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters can be attributed to the arbitrary omission in the Gregg list of a class of words specified in the criteria for selection as "short, simple words that any student . . . can easily write such words as cat, dog, etc."²² Any attempt, however, to estimate what proportion of the omissions are attributable to this classification would be highly subjective and correspondingly unsound. Inspection of Appendix B shows that, though the Gregg list has eliminated "cat" and "dog," examples cited as short, simple words easily written in shorthand, it includes "be," "but," "day," "man," "take," and others. It seems highly improbable that this type of omission could account for a major portion of the remaining items of the Horn-Peterson list, which represents more than 6,000 words not accounted for by the measurable omissions from the Gregg list.

A liberal interpretation of related but not identical entries suggests approximate equivalence in derivatives. The typed data show, for example, the forms "affect," "affected," "affecting," "affection," "affective," and "affects" in one list and "affect," "affectation," "affectionate," "disaffected," and "unaffectedly," in the other. On the assumption that the shorthand writer can therefore ascertain the necessary sound-symbol in the Gregg list to apply to the ranked word-form of the Horn-Peterson list, the findings, in numerical terms, may fail to reveal the full extent of equivalence from a practical standpoint.

Nevertheless, the measured findings warrant the conclusion that the extent of agreement between the two lists are relatively small. The Horn-Peterson list offers 14,721 words that are known to have been used in business letters, yet the Shorthand Dictionary, presenting 18,671 entries, records only 6,368 of these specific word-forms.

Both lists are challengeable as to reliability. In view of the subjectivity of the selecting and eliminating to draw less than 18,000 different words from a dictionary range of approximately 100,000 words for the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary, and the limited samplings of low-frequency words in the Horn-Petersen list, neither of the lists should have unqualified acceptance as a measure of business writing vocabulary. The findings of this study support the comment by Humphrey that "the proper function of the word-frequency count in the selection of shorthand practice material should be that of insuring that the running material selected is neither restricted to the commonest words nor unduly studded with unusual and infrequent words. . . The teacher fully aware of the implications inherent in word-frequency counts. . . will insist upon a supply of dictation material that has been proved to approximate the vocabulary burden of ordinary English as shown by a suitable word-frequency analysis."²³

Evidence from this study seem to show there is a need for a revision of the Gregg Shorthand Dictionary. Such a revision should be beneficial particularly to future students of Gregg shorthand.
